Clive Hamilton on China’s Silent Invasion

Clive Hamilton's book Silent Invasion: China's Influence in Australia, published today, has had a chequered history. Allen & Unwin, his long-time publisher, declined to publish the work in November 2017, citing the threat of legal action from the Chinese government. Books+Publishing reported on 6 February that Clive Hamilton ‘has since rewritten the book to minimise the legal risk’.

Our reviewer, Dr David Brophy of the University of Sydney, finds Clive Hamilton's claims of a unique Chinese threat to or interference in Australia politics exaggerated and misleading. China, Brophy argues, asserts its interests and curries favour in exactly the same way that other regimes do – including Australia and the United States.

Quotes from David Brophy’s review

- ‘If implemented, Hamilton’s residency blacklist would license a form of red-baiting far more intense than any Cold War snooping in Australia’s Chinatowns.’

- ‘Readers of Silent Invasion will search in vain for evidence that Chinese actors have impaired the normal functioning of our imperfect democracy.’

- ‘In the absence of more Chinese Australian voices in this debate, Hamilton foists his black-and-white view onto the community’

Read David Brophy’s review of Silent Invasion now on the ABR website.

David Brophy studies the social and political history of China’s northwest, particularly the Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region, and its connections with the Islamic and Russian/Soviet worlds. After finishing his PhD in 2011, he spent two years as a postdoctoral fellow at the Australian Centre on China in the World, at the Australian National University, before coming to the University of Sydney in 2013. His first book, Uyghur Nation (2016), is on the politics of Uyghur nationalism between China and the Soviet Union in the early twentieth century. He is available for interview.

Further information

More information about Australian Book Review can be found on the ABR website.

Please direct interview requests to Darren Saffin at Progressive PR and Communications on (03) 9696 6417 or darren@progressivepr.com.au